Dart is responsible for the supervision of a large police department that patrols the county including the day to day operations of Cook County Jail, with roughly 9,000 inmates and 3,000 correctional officers, and for providing judicial safety in hundreds of courtrooms across Cook County. Also, Dart has also been at the forefront of a variety of social issues. He was the first sheriff in the nation to respond to the mortgage foreclosure crisis when, in October 2008, he announced his deputies would no longer conduct evictions until greater safeguards could be put into place to protect struggling homeowners. Dart again made worldwide headlines in March 2009 when he filed a federal lawsuit against the popular website craigslist, accusing its owners of creating a public nuisance through its "erotic services" section. Sheriff Tom Dart has brought an aggressive, yet innovative approach to law enforcement.
